

"I took the GED® Test. What happens now?"

1. Getting Your Test Scores

View your scores online within three days. Go to www.GED123.org and log in as a "Returning Student" and use your access code.

► Understanding Your Test Scores

To earn a GED equivalency diploma in Arizona, you must earn 2,250 total points (450 average on the five parts) with no individual content area score lower than 410. Standard scores on the GED Test range from 200 to 800. A percentile rank is also given for each content area. The percentile rank compares your scores to those graduating high school seniors and shows the percentage of those seniors who earned scores at or below those you earned. If you get a score of  on the Writing section, that means your essay did not meet the minimum passing score. You will have to retake both the multiple choice and essay part again.

2. Your Test Results

► Congratulations! You passed! Receiving Your Diploma

After passing the Test, your Arizona Equivalency Diploma and an Official Transcript will be mailed to the address on your GED record. If you have moved or are not sure what the address is on your record, please provide any address corrections to the GED Examiner the day of testing.

► What if I didn't pass?

You do not have to take the whole Test again, just the parts that you did not pass. You will keep your highest score in any content area, even if you retest and make a lower score. The best advice is to go back to the adult education center for more instruction in that area. Practice by taking the Official Practice Tests for any subject you want to take again. Being prepared makes all the difference. Don't delay! Earn your diploma while you are familiar with the Test and subject matter.

3. After Your GED, KEEP GOING!!!

Congratulations! You did it. You should be very proud of this special accomplishment. With your GED® credential, a new world is open to you. But don't stop now.

In today's world, many good jobs require additional education or training, so think about taking classes at your local community college or a four-year university. You can earn a certificate in a specialized program or a two-year or four-year degree. Contact the college for admission and financial aid information.

► Your future is waiting for you.
KEEP GOING.
